SYNOPSIS

**Memory Market** **Synopsis:** In a sprawling, neon-lit metropolis where memories are bought and sold like commodities, NINA (late 20s, disheveled and longing) grapples with a fragmented past and a desperate need to uncover her true identity. The city thrives on the trade of memories, with its citizens either lost in euphoric recollections or trapped in despair. Nina's journey begins on the bustling streets, where she encounters a MEMORY DEALER who inadvertently drops a memory chip at her feet. This chip, a tantalizing promise of a better past, ignites her quest for self-discovery. Back in her bare apartment, Nina receives a cryptic message from an unknown number: "Your past is not what you think." This revelation propels her into the shadowy underworld of memory thieves and dealers.

. Determined to reclaim her identity, Nina seeks out a ROGUE MEMORY THIEF (30s, scruffy but confident). He warns her of the dangers, asserting that memories are more than just currency—they are the essence of one's soul. Despite the risks, Nina's resolve strengthens, and the two form an uneasy alliance to infiltrate the MEMORY DEALER'S lair. Their mission is fraught with peril. As they navigate the dimly lit room filled with swirling memories, a loud bang signals their discovery. Forced to flee, Nina and the Rogue Memory Thief find themselves on the run, chased by armed thugs and shadowy figures intent on protecting their lucrative trade. Amidst the chaos, Nina's determination to uncover her past intensifies. She experiences moments of doubt and fear, but the Rogue Memory Thief's unwavering support bolsters her spirit. T.
